

Maliha Chishti is currently a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Toronto researching liberal pluralism and post-war reconstruction, with a focus on Afghanistan and Iraq. She is the former Director of the Hague Appeal for Peace, United Nations office where she coordinated the Global Campaign for Peace Education. While in New York she developed the first peace and disarmament education pilot project for the United Nations Department for Disarmament Affairs implemented in four war-shattered countries and most significantly helped to initiate the historic Security Council Resolution 1325 on Women, Peace and Security. Maliha has worked as an anti-AIDS education prevention officer in Malawi (Central Africa) and most recently she conceptualized and supervised a capacity-building training program for over 90 Afghan women organizations across Afghanistan. She was formerly on the executive board of Science for Peace, International Association of Muslim Social Scientists and is a UN representative for Voice of Women – Canada. She is currently a lecturer at the University of Toronto and George Brown College, in the fields of political science and sociology. She has been given the distinct honor as a “Great Minds Alumni” by the University of Toronto.
